attack on clocktower

A Homebrew Blood on the Clocktower Script by Besjbo

*We're born free. All of us. Free. Some don't believe it, some try to take it away. To hell with them! Water like fire, mountains of ice, the whole bit. Lay your eyes on that, and you'll know what freedom is, that it's worth fighting for! Fight to live, risk it all for even a glimmer of real freedom! It doesn't matter what's waiting outside the gate, or what comes in! It doesn't matter how cruel the world can be, or how unjust! Fight. Fight. Fight. FIGHT! FIGHT!!!

Attack on Clocktower is a battlefield with existential stakes. The town has been invaded by non-player characters that cannot be executed and kill each night until they are stopped. If the Good team works together to protect each other and take on the Titan threat, they can build enough trust to expose Evil, but Evil can disrupt Good's battle plans, sowing mistrust between comrades, and will send more and more Titans until Good is overwhelmed. Good players must be willing to sacrifice themselves to hold off the Titans for just long enough for their teammates to root out the traitors to humanity hiding in their midst.

Intermediate. Recommended for team players who enjoy war games and are resolute in the face of death.

When playing Attack on Clocktower...

Good players must work together to hold the Titan threat at bay. Each Titan will kill each night, and more and more Titans are always coming, so the Good team must cooperate or be utterly crushed. Some Townsfolk kill Titans outright, some reposition players or Titans, some protect their comrades, and some gain information at the expense of attracting Titans. Each day, the town must debate how to deal with the Titans tonight, and agree on a plan to minimize casualties, or at least make their deaths worthwhile.

The Good team must be unafraid to sacrifice themselves for the greater cause. All players have the ability to fight, giving up their ability for the night, to take down the Titan that kills them. If the Good team goes down fighting, they can hold Evil team to one kill per Titan, and keep casualties to a minimum. Good players gain information by fighting Titans, and by drawing Titans nearer to themselves – if they are willing to leap to their certain deaths, they might buy their teammates enough time to solve the game.

Evil players are equipped with an arsenal of tactics to disrupt the battle, and will always eventually win the war. However, they must blend in and appear to be helping Good, just enough to avoid being compromised. The Demons all cause Titans to enter every night, and each has their own means of controlling the Titans. They do not choose the night deaths, but death is not the central mechanic it usually is. The gameplay centers around battling Titans, and each Demon has its own way to fight.

The Minions are highly tactical and can each turn the tide of battle, if they can infiltrate the town's planning. Key players will be moved out of position or find themselves unable to fight, players will find themselves overwhelmed if The Jaw can predict their actions, and every Good player must be cautious about sharing too much information, lest The Founding solve the game and seize a sudden Evil victory.

Special Rules: Non-Player Character and Fabled

Titan

You enter neighboring an alive player, and disappear when you die. Each night, attack a neighbor, then move to neighbor as many alive players as possible. You can't kill the Demon.

Titans are non-player characters that represent the primary threat to the Good team. Titans enter the town throughout the game, and kill a player each night, until they are killed.

"On that day, humanity received a grim reminder. We lived in fear of the Titans, and were disgraced to live in these cages we called walls."

Examples:

On the first night, a Titan enters due to the Demon's ability. The Storyteller chooses for the Titan to enter between Sam and James. The next night, the Storyteller chooses for the Titan to kill Sam, then moves it between Kat and Sophia. The Demon causes a new Titan to enter, and the Storyteller chooses for it to enter between Pam and Nicky. At dawn, the Storyteller announces that Sam has died and the Titan next to him has moved between Kat and Sophia, and a new Titan has entered town between Pam and Nicky.

One Titan enters due to The Jaw's ability, and three Titans enter due to The Colossal's ability. At dawn, the Storyteller announces that four Titans have entered, and shows all their locations in the Town Square, but does not specify which Titans have come from which ability.

Tony the Captain kills a neighboring Titan with their ability. A second Titan kills Adam, and is killed by Adam fighting. At dawn, the Storyteller announces that the Adam has died, and the Titans next to Adam and Tony have died. Then, the Storyteller removes the dead Titan tokens from the town square.

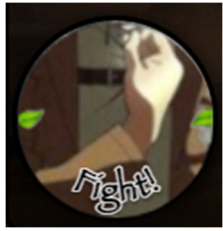

- Titans are non-player characters. They cannot vote or nominate, they have no alignment or character type, and they cannot be nominated or chosen for an ability that specifies a "player".
- The Storyteller makes all decisions on behalf of Titans.
- Titans can attack the Demon (or a dead player), but the attack will not cause a death.
- If there are multiple Titans, they attack simultaneously, then move simultaneously.
- It should always be clear which Titan is which. If several are moving around, give them names!

How to run:

When an ability says that a Titan enters, decide where the Titan will sit. You must have it neighbor at least one alive player. At dawn, announce that a Titan has entered, and place its token in Town Square.

Each night, for each Titan, choose one of their neighbors to attack, and place the "Die" reminder token on them. Then, choose a place for the Titan to move to, with 2 alive neighbors if that is possible, and place the "Move" reminder token there. At dawn, announce the death, and the move.

Fight!

Each night, alive players may choose to fight! If a Titan attacks you while you are fighting, it dies too. Townsfolk who choose to fight lose their ability tonight.

Fight! is a Fabled that allows players to kill Titans, albeit at the cost of their own lives and abilities.

“Fight! You must fight! If you win, you live. If you lose, you die. If you don’t fight, you can’t win!”

Examples:

The Storyteller asks Ryan the Scout whether he would like to fight tonight. Ryan says no, choosing instead to use his ability. The next night, a Titan is neighboring Ryan, so he chooses to fight, and does not get to use his Scout ability. The Titan attacks Ryan, and both Ryan and the Titan die.

The Jaw chooses to fight, to gain trust in case a Garrison chooses them. They are not a Townsfolk, so they still use their ability, choose a fighting Townsfolk, and cause a Titan to enter.

Nick the Military Police chooses to fight. No Titan attacks Nick, so he does not die or kill any Titans. Nick still loses his Military Police ability tonight and is not prompted to use it. Tomorrow night, he chooses not to fight, and uses his ability.

- Players who choose to fight are considered to be “fighting” all night. The next day, they are no longer fighting, they regain their ability, and they may choose again the following night.
- Players who are attacked by Titans will die regardless of fighting (unless another ability specifically prevents this). If a Titan attacks a non-fighting player, the player will die and the Titan will live. If a Titan attacks a fighting player, both the player and the Titan will die.
- If a non-Townsfolk chooses to fight, they will not lose their ability, but they will still be fighting, and will still kill Titans that attack them tonight. Evil players must choose whether to gain trust by helping the Good team kill Titans, or avoid fighting to hasten the Titan onslaught.

How to run:

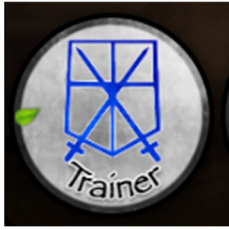

Each night, whether or not there are any Titans in town, ask each alive player whether they would like to fight. Mark each player that chooses to fight with the “Fighting” reminder token until dawn. Townsfolk marked with this token have no ability tonight.

If a Titan attacks a player who is fighting, both the player and the Titan will immediately die. Mark the Titan with the “Die” reminder token.

If any ability would check whether a player is fighting, check if the player in question has the “Fighting” reminder token. Whether or not the player engages with any Titans tonight, if they chose to fight, they are “fighting” tonight.

Townfolk

Trainer

The Trainer starts knowing they can trust a particular character, provided that they hit the ground running.

“Average men aren’t able to accomplish anything. Special people do exist. It’s just that... I wasn’t one of them.”

Examples:

On the first night, Sam the Scout, Nicky The Jaw, and Emily the Wall Engineer choose to fight. The Storyteller has the option to show Bob the Trainer either “Scout”, or “Wall Engineer”. They decide to show Bob “Wall Engineer”.

On the first night, only Sophia The Founding chooses to fight. The Storyteller wakes up Carl the Trainer, shakes their head, and puts Carl back to sleep.

- The Trainer learns one in-play Good character, but not which player they are.
- If nobody fights the first night, the Trainer will not learn any character.

How to run:

On the first night, note which Good players are fighting. Choose one of them, and mark them with the “Seen” reminder token. Wake the Trainer, and show them the character token of the player marked with the “Seen” reminder token.

If no Good players are fighting the first night, wake the Trainer, and shake your head to indicate that they do not learn anything.

Scout

Each night*, choose a Titan. If both its alive neighbors are fighting, kill it.

If a Titan is surrounded by fighters, the Scout can deal the finishing blow without anyone being hurt.

“For humanity’s sake, dedicate your hearts!”

Examples:

A Titan is between Kat the Commander and Emily the Serum. Both Kat and Emily choose to fight, and Josh the Scout, who neighbors a second Titan, chooses not to fight, but to use his ability. Josh chooses the Titan between Kat and Emily, and the Titan dies, with both Kat and Emily surviving. Later that night, the Titan next to Josh attacks him, and Josh dies.

A Titan is between Tyler the Commander and Adam, The Cart. Tyler and Adam both tell the town they will fight, but Adam chooses not to fight. Sam the Scout chooses the Titan between Tyler and Adam, but nothing happens, since Adam is not fighting. The Titan attacks Tyler, Tyler dies, and the Titan dies too, since Tyler was fighting.

A Titan is between Josh the Garrison and Zac, the dead Trainer. Zac is next to Ben the Recruit, who is alive. Both Josh and Ben fight. Bob the Scout chooses the Titan between Josh and Zac, and kills it.

- The Scout acts before Titans do. If the Scout kills a Titan, it will not attack or move.
- If the Scout does not kill its target, the Scout is not harmed – nothing will happen.
- The Scout does not learn whether or not they kill their target, only whether or not the Titan has died in the night. If their ability fails, but some other ability kills the Titan they chose, they will not know.

How to run:

Each night, if the Scout chooses not to fight, indicate for them to choose a Titan (by indicating its location on the Town Square, by indicating its neighbors, or by name, if you have decided to give your Titans arbitrary names). If both of the alive neighbors of that Titan are fighting, mark the Titan with the “Die” reminder token. It does not attack or move, and will disappear after its death is announced at dawn. If one or both of the alive neighbors of that Titan are not fighting, nothing happens. Regardless, put the Scout to sleep, without indicating whether or not their ability successfully killed the Titan.

Garrison

Each night, choose 3 players. If they are all fighting, Titans cannot move or enter next to them.

The Garrison walls off fighters, protecting them from the approach of new Titans.

“Fear not, your lordship. In a real battle against the Titans, it is unnecessary for the commander to throw the match.”

Examples:

Ryan the Scout, James the Commander, and Tony the Serum all choose to fight. Jamie the Garrison chooses Ryan, James, and Tony. Tonight, a Titan enters, and the Storyteller chooses for it to enter next to Jamie, even though Jamie’s neighbors are both dead, because Jamie is the only alive player that a Titan can enter next to.

Emily and James choose to fight, but Amy does not. Jamie the Garrison chooses Emily, James, and Amy. The Garrison ability does nothing, and a Titan enters next to James tonight.

The only living players are Jamie the Garrison, Sam the Scout, Kyle the Trainer, Matt The Colossal, and Joe the Captain, all sitting next to each other in that order left to right, Sam, Kyle, and Joe choose to fight, and Jamie chooses them all. Matt’s ability causes three Titans to enter, but only one enters, to the left of Jamie. There are no other legal spaces for Titans to enter.

- The Garrison does not prevent Titans from entering, but merely restricts where they can enter. However, if there is no legal space for a Titan to enter, it does not enter. Similarly, if there is no legal space for a Titan to move to, it stays in place.
- If the Garrison dies in the night, their ability goes away, and Titans may enter freely.
- If any one of the three players the Garrison chooses are not fighting, the ability fails.
- If a player the Garrison protects dies in the night, Titans still cannot enter or move next to them.
- If another ability would cause a Titan to enter or move next to a specific player, and the Garrison is protecting that player, then that other ability fails, and the Titan does not enter/move.

How to run:

Each night, if the Garrison chooses not to fight, indicate for them to choose 3 players, then put them to sleep. If all three players the Garrison chose are fighting, mark them each with the “Safe” reminder token. Tonight, Titans cannot enter or move next to players marked “Safe”. If an ability specifies that a Titan enters or moves next to a specific player marked “Safe”, nothing happens. If a Titan would enter or move to an unspecified location, you may choose any location, that is not next to a “Safe” player. If this causes there to be no legal location for a Titan to enter or move to, the Titan does not enter or move.

Military Police

Each night, choose a player. If they are Evil, a Titan enters next to you.

The Military Police searches for Evil, but finds themselves in danger if they get too close.

“Titans? It’s not my place to think about that. All I do is carry out the job given to me.”

Examples:

Joe the Military Police chooses Sophia, The Founding. Adam, The Colossal, chooses not to have a Titan enter. At dawn, the Storyteller announces that a Titan has entered between Joe and Carl. Joe does not know whether the Titan entered due to the Demon or his own ability, but figures it out the following night when three Titans enter.

Kyle the Military Police is surrounded by Titan on both sides. He chooses James, The Beast, so a Titan enters next to him. At dawn, the Storyteller announces that a Titan has entered between Kyle, and another Titan.

- The Military Police, like all abilities that cause Titans to enter, acts after Titans attack. The Titan that enters will not act until the following night.
- The Military Police will not learn whether a Titan entered due to their own ability, or due to another ability. However, their ability can only cause a Titan to enter next to them.
- If a Titan has already entered next to the Military Police tonight due to another ability, and they choose an Evil player, a second Titan enters next to them.

How to run:

Each night, if the Military Police chooses not to fight, indicate for them to choose a player, then put them to sleep. If the chosen player is Evil, mark the Military Police with the “Titan Enters” reminder token. Choose which side of the Military Police the Titan will enter on, and at dawn, announce that a Titan has entered, and place its token in the Town Square. If the chosen player is Good, nothing happens.

Captain

Each night*, if you fought last night, kill all Titans that neighbor you.

Once the Captain is prepared, they carve a swath through neighboring Titans and escape unscathed.

“No casualties! Don’t you dare die!”

Examples:

Hazel the Captain chooses to fight on the first night. That night, a Titan enters next to Hazel. The following night, Hazel chooses to use her ability. The Titan is killed, and no players die in the night.

John the Captain did not fight last night, but finds themselves surrounded by Titans, so they choose to fight. A Titan attacks John, John dies, and the Titan dies, since John was fighting. The Titan on the other side of John is not harmed, and attacks the player on the other side of John.

- The Captain does not require the player to target a Titan. If they fought last night, and their ability is active tonight, any Titans next to them will die.
- The Captain acts before Titans act, so any Titans killed by the Captain will not attack or move.
- While the Captain is fighting, they have no ability and behave like any other fighting player. If a Titan attacks them, both the Captain and the Titan will die.

How to run:

Each night, if the Captain chooses to fight, mark them with the “Active” reminder token. If the Captain starts the night with the “Active” reminder token and chooses not to fight, mark any adjacent Titans with the “Die” reminder token, then remove the “Active” reminder token.

Vanguard

Once per game at night*, choose a Titan. You both die, and no new Titans enter tonight.

The Vanguard may sacrifice themselves to kill a Titan and stave off the entry of more Titans.

"If we humans go extinct, it won't be because we were eaten by Titans. It'll be because we killed ourselves off! We cannot afford to die any further inside. I kindly ask of you! Please die here!"

Examples:

There are two Titans in the Town, one between Matt the Vanguard and a dead player, and one between Sophia and Adam. Matt chooses to use his ability, and chooses the Titan between Sophia and Adam. Matt dies, and that Titan dies. The Titan next to Matt kills nobody, since both its neighbors are dead, and moves between Sophia and Adam. The Armored would cause a Titan to enter, but it does not. At dawn, the Storyteller announces that Matt has died, the Titan between Sophia and Adam has died, the Titan next to Matt has moved between Sophia and Adam, and no new Titans have entered.

The night that Seth the Vanguard uses their ability, The Jaw, the Military Police, and The Beast would all cause new Titans to be created. None of their abilities do anything tonight.

- The Vanguard must choose one specific Titan to kill. No other Titans are affected, and other players can still be killed by other Titans, the night the Vanguard uses their ability.
- If the Titan the Vanguard chooses does not die due to another ability, the rest of the Vanguard's ability still applies. The Vanguard will die, and no new Titans will enter tonight.
- The movement of existing Titans is not affected by the Vanguard's ability.

How to run:

Each night (after the first), if the Vanguard is not fighting, ask them whether they would like to use their ability. If they would, indicate for them to choose a Titan. Mark both the Vanguard and the Titan with the "Die" reminder token, and mark the Vanguard with the "No Titans Enter" reminder token. If any new Titans would be created tonight for any reason, nothing happens.

Recruit

Each night*, choose a Titan. It moves to neighbor as many alive Good players as possible.

The Recruit gains information by luring Titans closer to clusters of Good players.

“It’s us who give meaning to our comrade’s lives! We die trusting the living who follow to find meaning in our lives!”

Examples:

There are three Titans in town, one of them between Kat the Scout and Emily the Serum. That Titan kills Kat, and the Storyteller decides that it moves between Adam The Jaw and Tyler the Noble. Later that night, Sam the Recruit chooses the Titan between Kat and Emily, so the Storyteller decides that it moves between Sam the Recruit and Zac the Trainer. At dawn, the Storyteller announces that Kat has died in the night, and the Titan between Kat and Emily has moved between Sam and Zac. Nobody ever knows that the Storyteller originally intended the Titan to move between Adam and Tyler.

James the Recruit chooses the Titan next to Nicky the Commander and Josh the Garrison. Josh has protected other three alive Good players, Nicky, Pat, and Kat, so there is no way for the Titan to move between two alive Good players. Instead, the Storyteller decides that it moves between Josh the Garrison and Adam The Female, since 1 alive Good neighbor is the most that is possible.

- The Recruit acts after Titans attack. When a Titan moves due to the Recruit’s ability, the Titan will already have attacked, and will not attack in their new position until the following night.
- The Recruit will usually cause a Titan to move for the second time that night. Do not announce that the Titan has moved twice during the night, only announce where the Titan has ended up.
- The Recruit will always choose Titans based on their outdated location in the Town Square. Regardless, move the Titan that they chose, overriding whatever moves they previously made.

How to run:

Each night (after the first), if the Recruit is not fighting, indicate for them to choose a Titan. Mark that Titan with the “Lured” reminder token, and choose a space for the Titan to move to neighbor two alive Good players. If this is impossible, because there are not enough alive Good players, or because the movement of Titans is restricted by other abilities, choose a space for the Titan to move to neighbor one alive Good player. At dawn, do not mention any previous moves the Titan may have made that night, and announce only their latest position as you move their token in the Town Square.

Wall Priest

You start knowing 3 in-play characters. The Demon starts with “Once per game at night, guess which characters the Wall Priest knows. A Titan enters next to each character you guess correctly.”

The Wall Priest starts with incredible knowledge, but cannot share it without unleashing the Titans.

“You have every right to be angry. But we did not stay silent out of malice! I do not cling to my own life as if it is something precious! I will prove that to you.”

Examples:

On the first night, Sam the Wall Priest learns “Commander”, “Noble”, and “The Founding”. Nicky The Armored is asked if he wishes to guess which characters the Wall Priest knows, and chooses not to guess. Sam does not publicly share his information, but Nicky notices the town claiming that the Commander is trustworthy, and the Minion is The Founding. The next night, Nicky is again asked if he wishes to guess which characters the Wall Priest knows, and guesses “Commander”, “The Founding”, and “Scout”. A Titan enters next to the Commander and next to The Founding, and a third Titan enters between the Captain and the Recruit due to The Armored’s normal ability.

On the first day, Emily the Wall Priest is executed. Ben The Beast keeps the ability granted to them by the Wall Priest, but chooses not to use it. Later in the game, Ben is executed before using the Wall Priest ability, and Sophia the Soldier becomes the Evil Beast. Sophia does not gain the Wall Priest ability, since the Wall Priest is dead. If the Wall Priest was still alive when Sophia became the Demon, Sophia would have gained the Wall Priest ability, whether or not Ben had used it himself.

- The Wall Priest causes the Demon to start with an extra ability, which they will keep regardless of what happens to the Wall Priest. The Demon will be prompted about this ability each night, and will therefore know that a Wall Priest is in play.
- The Wall Priest may learn any combination of in-play characters, of any type. They do not learn which players are those characters, only that the characters are in-play.
- If the Demon guesses a player correctly, but a Titan cannot enter next to them for whatever reason, nothing happens, and the Wall Priest’s ability is still spent.

How to run:

On the first night, wake the Wall Priest, and show them 3 in-play character tokens of any type.

Each night, wake the Demon, show them the Wall Priest token, and ask whether they would like to use their ability. If they say yes, indicate for them to point to three characters. For each character they correctly guessed, mark that player with “Titan Enters”, and a Titan enters next to them if possible.

Wall Engineer

Each night*, if a Townsfolk was executed today, build a wall between you and them. Titans cannot move past your walls.

The Wall Engineer gradually restricts the movement of Titans, until they are trapped in place.

Examples:

On the first day, Tyler the Trainer is executed. That night, a wall is built between Tyler and Bob, the Wall Engineer. Bob is 3 seats away from Tyler: the seating order is Tyler, a Titan, Patrick, and Bob. The Titan kills Patrick, then moves between Patrick and Bob – their only legal move. At dawn, the Storyteller does not announce that a wall has been built, only announces that the Titan between Patrick and Tyler has moved between Patrick and Bob.

Sam the Wall Engineer has built a wall between themselves and Kyle, and another wall between themselves and Adam. A Titan between Kyle and Adam is stuck, and cannot attack an alive player or move. The Storyteller decides that the next Titan to enter enters next to Sam. The next night, that Titan kills Sam, and the Titan between Kyle and Adam finally moves to neighbor two alive players – because Titans move after attacking, that Titan does not kill anyone for a second night in a row.

- The walls built by the Wall Engineer are invisible to the Town and to the Wall Engineer. Their existence can only be inferred by the movement of Titans.
- The Wall Engineer does not restrict the spaces at which Titans can enter play, only movement.
- If the Wall Engineer chooses to fight, they lose their ability that night. No new wall will be built, and Titan movement is not restricted. When they die, Titans can move freely again.
- Walls prevent a Titan from taking any path past a player a wall is built to, traveling along the circle of players. Put simply, a Titan on one side of the wall cannot move to the other side.
- If the Wall Engineer moves, any previously built walls remain in place.

How to run:

Each night (after the first), if the Wall Engineer chose not to fight, and if a Townsfolk was executed today, mark both the Townsfolk and Wall Engineer with the “Wall Built” reminder token. While the Wall Engineer’s ability is active, Titan cannot legally move from one side of a player with the “Wall Built” reminder token, to the other side of that player. If this causes a Titan to have no legal moves when you are choosing for them to move, they do not move. You do not announce the formation of walls, only the movement of all Titans. While the Wall Engineer is fighting or dead, Titans can move freely of walls.

Omni-Directional

Each night*, you may choose 2 alive players: they swap seats.

The Omni-Directional flies through the town, sending players in and out of danger as needed.

“Those incapable of staying upright aren’t suited to even be used as decoys!”

Examples:

A Titan is between Kat the Scout and Tony the Commander. Ben the Omni-Directional chooses themselves and Tony. Ben and Tony swap seats, and the Titan is now between Kat and Ben. The Titan attacks and kills Ben, and Tony survives, far away from any Titans.

Kevin the Wall Engineer is surrounded by Titans. James the Omni-Directional chooses Kevin and Hazel the Captain. Kevin and Hazel swap seats, and both Titans are killed by Hazel’s ability.

A Titan is next to Josh the Serum, and a dead player. Zoe the Omni-Directional chooses Josh and Nicky, the War Hammer Titan. They swap seats, and the Titan kills Nicky.

- The Omni-Directional may choose any players, including themselves. They may not choose Titans.
- The swap happens immediately, so any abilities that track neighbors might have different effects after the swap.
- Players will not learn they are swapped until dawn. If they wish to execute a maneuver involving a swap, they must plan it out in advance.
- If a player would choose a swapped player for their ability, the ability still targets that player, even though their location has changed.

How to run:

Each night (after the first), if the Omni-Directional chose not to fight, indicate for them to choose 2 players. They may shake their head no, or choose any 2 alive players. Mark those characters with the “Swap” reminder token. Their new positions will not be announced until dawn, but they swap seats effectively immediately, for any abilities that would care about their position that night.

Commander

Good players who fight cannot be attacked by Titans.

The Commander keeps their fighters safe, preventing Titans from engaging with them.

“My soldiers, rage! My soldiers, scream! My soldiers, FIGHT!”

Examples:

A Titan is between Kat the Scout and Pat the Trainer. Kat chooses to fight, and Pat does not. Because James the Commander is active, the Titan cannot attack Kat, so it attacks and kills Pat.

A Titan is between Emily the Serum and Bill the Recruit. Both Emily and Bill choose to fight. Because of Ben the Commander, the Titan cannot attack at all. The Storyteller chooses for it to move next to Ben.

A Titan is between Ben the Commander and Kyle the Soldier. Ben chooses to fight, so his ability is no longer active. The Titan attacks Ben, and both Ben and the Titan die.

- While the Commander is active, Titans cannot attack Good players who are fighting. If a Titan cannot attack one neighbor, they must attack the other. If a Titan neighbors two fighting Good players, they cannot attack at all.
- Good players will not kill Titans by fighting while the Commander is active, since Titans will never attack them. However, Titans can still be killed by other abilities.
- When the Commander themselves is fighting, they have no ability, so they and other fighting players are vulnerable.

How to run:

While the Commander is not fighting, no fighting Good player may be attacked by a Titan. If a Titan has no legal attacks, it does not attack at all tonight, but still moves. Any player attacked by a Titan still dies, but a Titan will never attack a Good player who is fighting tonight, while the Commander ability is active.

Serum

Once per game at night*, choose a dead player. If a Minion is dead, the chosen player resurrects and becomes the character of a dead Minion.

The Serum transfers the powers of a fallen Minion into another fallen player, resurrecting them.

"I'm sorry... I wish there was more time to explain..."

Examples:

Amy the Serum chooses to use her ability, and targets Bob the Commander. Sophia The Jaw and Chris The Founding are both dead. Bob is told that he is now the Good Jaw, and at dawn, the Storyteller announces that Bob has come back to life.

Joe the Serum chooses to use his ability, and targets Rick the Captain. No Minions are dead, so nothing happens, and Joe cannot use his ability again.

Dan the Serum chooses to use his ability, and targets Sophia The Cart. Sophia does not change characters, remains the Evil Cart, and comes back to life.

- The Serum does not choose which Minion the resurrected player becomes. The Storyteller chooses a character from among dead Minion characters. If no Minions are dead, nothing happens, and the Serum ability is lost.
- The resurrected player does not change alignment. If they were Good, they remain Good; if they are Evil, they remain Evil.
- The resurrected player is informed of their new character at the earliest opportunity.

How to run:

Each night (after the first), if the Serum chose not to fight, ask if they would like to use their ability. If they would, indicate for them to choose a dead player, and mark the Serum with the "No ability" reminder token. If a Minion is dead, mark the Serum's chosen player with the "Alive" reminder token, and change their character to the character of a dead Minion. Wake the chosen player, and inform them of their new character. At dawn, announce that a player has returned to life.

The Attack

Once per game at night*, choose a player. If they are the Royal Blood, all Titans die. [+Royal Blood Outsider]

If The Attack Titan can locate the Royal Blood, they unlock their power and destroy every Titan.

"I'll kill them all! I'll wipe every last one of them... off the face of this earth!"

Examples:

There are 5 Titans in town, and Jack The Attack chooses to use his ability, and selects Emily, the Royal Blood. At dawn, the Storyteller announces that all 5 Titans have died, and no players have died in the night.

There are 12 players in the game, including The Attack. There would normally be two Outsiders, but because of the Attack Titan, there are three Outsiders in play, and one must specifically be the Royal Blood.

Josh The Attack chooses to use his ability, and targets Mike The Jaw. Nothing happens, and The Attack ability cannot be used again.

- The Attack modifies setup to add one Outsider, and to specifically include the Royal Blood. If the Attack Titan is in the bag, add the normal number of Outsiders, none of which are the Royal Blood. Then, remove one Townsfolk from the bag, and replace it with the Royal Blood.
- The Attack and the Royal Blood are not informed whether or not The Attack chose correctly, and no public announcement is made. The Storyteller only announces that all Titans have died.
- Titans can still enter the night The Attack uses their ability.

How to run:

Each night (after the first), if The Attack chose not to fight, ask if they would like to use their ability. If they would, indicate for them to choose a player, and mark The Attack with the "No Ability" reminder token. If they chose the Royal Blood, mark them with the "Kill All Titans" reminder token. All Titans immediately die, and do not attack or move tonight. Any Titans that enter later in the night are unaffected. If they did not choose the Royal Blood, nothing happens, and their ability cannot be used again.

Outsiders

Deserter

You do not know you are the Deserter. You think you are a Townsfolk and have their ability, but if you try to fight, you fail and lose your ability tonight.

The Deserter is effectively a Townsfolk that cannot fight, disrupting battle plans and sowing confusion.

“No! Let go of me! I won’t go back there! Go ahead, execute me, it’s a hundred times better than being eaten!”

Examples:

John the Deserter receives the Military Police token. On the first night, he chooses Tyler The Founding, and a Titan enters next to him. On the following night, he chooses to fight, but unbeknownst to him, he fails to fight. The Titan kills him, and moves away.

Gabriel the Deserter receives the Captain token. On the first night, he chooses to fight. The next night, he assumes that his ability will kill the Titan next to him, but it does not, and the Titan kills him.

Oliver the Deserter receives the Omni-Directional token. On the second night, he chooses to fight. Oliver fails to fight, but still loses his ability, so when the Scout fails to kill the Titan next to him, he blames the Scout.

- The Deserter will not be told that their attempts to fight are failing. Their Townsfolk ability will function normally, and they will lose their ability as if they were a fighting Townsfolk.
- If a Titan attacks a Deserter who has tried and failed to fight, the Deserter will die and the Titan will not. Any ability that tracks fighting will never count the Deserter as fighting.
- If the Deserter believes that they are The Attack, the Royal Blood will still be added.

How to run:

During setup, remove the Deserter token from the bag, and replace it with a Townsfolk token. If the Deserter believes that they are The Attack, replace an additional Townsfolk token with the Royal Blood. Mark the player who receives the Townsfolk token with the “Deserter” reminder token.

Treat the player as you would treat that Townsfolk, and their ability works the same as it would if they were a Townsfolk. If they choose to fight, they don’t, but they still lose their ability as a Townsfolk would. Any abilities that care about fighting will see that the Deserter is not fighting.

Noble

Each night*, if a Titan neighbors you, you might swap seats with an alive player. If you are executed, a Titan enters at the end of the night.

The Noble runs away when Titans are nearby, and attracts Titans in their wake.

Examples:

A Titan is seated between Sam the Noble and Kat the Recruit. Sam and Kat both choose to fight, but the Storyteller decides that Sam swaps seats with Tyler the Commander, who is not fighting. Adam the Scout chooses the Titan between Sam and Kat, but nothing happens, since the Titan is now neighboring Tyler, who is not fighting. The Titan attacks and kills Tyler.

The Town decides to execute James the Noble, to prevent them from causing more chaos. That night, The Jaw causes a Titan to enter, The Female causes a Titan to enter, and the Noble ability causes a Titan to enter, for a total of three Titans entering town that night.

- The Noble can swap seats with any alive player, or might not swap at all, at the discretion of the Storyteller. The Noble does not learn that they have swapped until dawn, but the swap is immediate, and impacts any abilities that would happen that night.
- If the Noble is executed, a Titan will enter at the very end of the night, once everyone else has acted. Notably, the Titan does not enter at the time the Noble acts in the night order.

How to run:

Each night (after the first), if the Noble is neighboring a Titan, you may choose any alive player to swap seats with the Noble, or choose not to have the Noble swap. You should usually make a decision to help Evil. If you choose to swap, mark both players with the “Swap” reminder token, and treat them as swapped immediately. Inform players of their new seats at dawn.

If the Noble is executed, mark them with the “Titan Enters” reminder token. At the end of the night, after everyone has acted, choose a place for the Titan to enter. Announce its location in the Town Square, but do not indicate which ability caused the Titan to enter.

Soldier

If there are 5 or more players alive the 1st time the Demon dies, you become the Evil Demon.

If the Demon falls, the Soldier betrays the town and takes over the Demon's mission.

"I don't know what's right anymore. But the only choice for me now is to face the consequences of my actions... and as a Warrior, fulfill my duty to the bitter end."

Examples:

Sophia the Soldier bluffs as the Captain. When Josh The Armored is executed, Sophia is woken and told that she is now the Evil Armored. She does not learn bluffs, or who her Minions are. The next day, Sophia talks to Josh, who she knows must be the original Demon, learns the Evil Team, and goes on to win with Evil.

Bob the Soldier tells everyone he is the Soldier, and asks to be executed. The next day, Edd The Beast is executed, but Bob does not turn Evil, since he is dead and has no ability, and Good wins.

- If the Demon dies for any reason while 5 or more players live, the Soldier will immediately become the Evil Demon, and be informed of their new character and alignment at the earliest opportunity. In this script, it is only possible for the Demon to die by execution.
- If the Soldier is dead when the Demon dies, their ability does not trigger, and the game ends.
- The Soldier can fight, and will not lose their ability when doing so, since they are an Outsider.
- The ability only works the first time the Demon dies. If the Demon has already died this game (because The War Hammer gave another player the Soldier ability and they already became the Demon), the Soldier will not become the Demon.

How to run:

The first time the Demon dies, if 5 or more players are alive, including the Demon and the Soldier, mark the Soldier with the "is the Demon" reminder token. They immediately become Evil, and become the Demon's character. Wake the Soldier at the earliest opportunity to inform them of their new character and alignment.

Royal Blood

Titans cannot kill you, and you cannot fight.

The Royal Blood lives in uneasy peace, immune from Titans but fearful of being found.

“Titans... they never should have existed in the first place. I will accept the responsibility of righting this wrong. Only... until the day that this retribution comes, I want to live inside the Walls. I want to enjoy this brief paradise, this world without conflict.”

Examples:

A Titan is between Kat the Royal Blood, and John The Founding. The Titan attacks Kat, who does not die. Nobody dies in the night, and Kat tells people that there must be a hidden Commander, afraid of being discovered by The Founding.

A Titan is between Adam the Royal Blood and Ben the Recruit. James the Scout tells the town that he intends to kill the Titan, but Adam cannot fight, so the Scout ability does nothing, and the Titan kills Ben. Adam privately explains to James that he is the Royal Blood, and asks James to help him stay hidden.

- The Royal Blood cannot be killed by Titans and cannot kill Titans. They may be attacked by Titans, but nothing will happen. They cannot choose to fight, and any ability that tracks fighting will never see them as fighting.
- The Royal Blood may be in play without The Attack or The Founding, with one, or with both. The Royal Blood will not know which, if any, of these characters are in play.
- If the Royal Blood is dead, other abilities that look for the Royal Blood still work.

How to run:

Unlike all other players, do not wake up the Royal Blood to ask them whether they would like to fight.

If a Titan attacks the Royal Blood, neither of them die, and the Titan moves.

Minions

The Cart

Each night*, you may choose 2 alive players: they swap seats. Any ability that would target one player tonight targets the other instead.

The Cart Titan moves players around the Town, disrupting abilities and causing chaos.

"...Why are you down there?!" "I guess it just feels more natural to me."

Examples:

Carl the Scout prepares to kill the Titan between Tony the Commander and Emily the Military Police, who both fight. The Cart swaps Carl and Emily. The Titan no longer has two fighting neighbors, so Carl's ability fails. The Titan attacks and kills Tony.

Doug The Attack announces that they are using their ability tonight. The Cart swaps Mike the Royal Blood with Ryan the Captain. Doug chooses Mike, but due to The Cart's ability, Doug's ability is redirected to Ryan and The Attack's ability fails.

Four players live, and the Colossal Titan is surrounded by Titans, while The Cart has no neighboring Titans. The Cart swaps themselves with the Colossal Titan. They die in the night, along with one Good player, and Evil wins.

- The Cart may choose any alive players including themselves, but may not move Titans.
- The swap happens immediately, but players do not learn they are swapped until dawn.
- If a swapped player is chosen by an ability tonight, the ability is treated as if the player chose the other swapped player. If the Garrison chooses both swapped players, they are still both chosen.

How to run:

Each night (after the first), indicate for The Cart to choose 2 alive players. They may shake their head no, or choose 2 alive players. Mark those players with the "Swap" reminder token. They immediately swap places for any ability that would care, but the swap is not announced until dawn.

During the night a player was swapped by The Cart, if another player's ability would choose them, that ability is instead treated as though it chose the other swapped player.

The Jaw

Each night, choose a player: if they are Townsfolk and fighting, a Titan enters next to them.

The Jaw Titan leaps into the action, calling additional Titans towards fighting players.

“The Jaw Titan is an assault unit. Its small size makes it the swiftest of all. Its powerful claws and jaws can crush just about anything.”

Examples:

John The Jaw chooses Marco on the first night. Marco is the Recruit and fights the first night, so a Titan enters next to him. The next night, Marco fights again, and dies in the night. John chooses Marco again, and another Titan enters next to him, since he is a fighting Townsfolk, even though he is dead.

Mack The Jaw and Beth The War Hammer both choose Dan the Captain. Dan tries to fight, but it fails because of Beth’s ability, so a Titan does not enter.

The players sitting next to Fran the Garrison are both dead, and there is a Titan next to Fran. Fran chooses to fight, and dies in the night. The Jaw chooses Fran, but nothing happens. Titans must enter neighboring an alive player. There is no legal space for a Titan to enter next to Fran, so nothing happens.

- A Titan enters whether or not the fighting Townsfolk died that night. However, Titans can only enter neighboring an alive player, so if there is no legal space for a Titan to enter, it doesn’t.
- As with all Titans, The Storyteller does not announce which Titans came from The Jaw.

How to run:

Each night, wake up The Jaw and indicate for them to choose a player. If that player is a Townsfolk and is marked with the “Fighting” reminder token, mark them with the “Titan Enters” reminder token. A Titan enters neighboring them, if possible.

The War Hammer

Each night, choose a player: until dusk, they gain an alive Outsider's ability and that Outsider malfunctions. [+1 Outsider]

The War Hammer Titan manifests dangerous abilities and uses them as weapons to stun their foes.

"Usurper. Do you have any last words?"

Examples:

Adam The War Hammer chooses Emily the Scout on the first night. Emily gains the Royal Blood ability, but does not fight, so nothing happens and she suspects nothing. The next night, Adam chooses Emily and she gains the Royal Blood ability again. She chooses to fight, since there is a Titan next to her, but Emily cannot fight (she is not told this). The Titan attacks her, but she survives due to the Royal Blood ability.

The game is solved. Everyone knows Beth is The Beast, and she is executed. Dan the Soldier expects to become Evil, but is confused when he remains good. Mabel the Commander was chosen by The War Hammer last night and gained the Soldier ability, and grins as she learns that she is Evil and The Beast.

Alice the Deserter Military Police is malfunctioning tonight because of Bob The War Hammer. She chooses Bob, but no Titan enters next to her. Tomorrow night, she chooses to fight. She is still malfunctioning, so even though she is the Deserter, she successfully fights!

The War Hammer chooses Dennis. No Outsiders are alive, so nothing happens.

- Chosen players still have their own abilities. They do not learn that they have gained an ability.
- If a player with the Royal Blood ability chooses to fight, nothing happens. Players with the Royal Blood ability are not actually the Royal Blood for the purposes of The Attack and The Founding.
- Townsfolk who choose to fight lose their ability tonight. Even they have the Deserter or Royal Blood ability, any Townsfolk who makes the choice to fight loses their ability tonight.
- You may give a Townsfolk with the Deserter ability a different Townsfolk ability, but you should almost always give them their own ability, or they will know they were chosen.

How to run:

At setup, replace one Townsfolk with an Outsider.

Each night, wake The War Hammer and indicate for them to choose a player. Mark an alive Outsider with the "Copied" reminder token: their ability does not function, but do not tell them that. Mark the chosen player with the "Gained" reminder token: they have the Outsider ability in addition to their own ability. At dusk, remove these tokens.

The Founding

If Good would win, publicly choose a player. If they are the Royal Blood, Evil wins instead. [+Royal Blood Outsider]

The Founding Titan must find the Royal Blood to turn the tables on a Good victory.

“To all subjects of Ymir...”

Examples:

Nicky The Founding bluffs as The Attack, and convinces Adam the Royal Blood to reveal themselves so they can use their ability. Nicky nominates Amy the Beast, gets her executed, and the Storyteller announces that the game is over. Nicky publicly claims to be The Founding and chooses Adam, and the Storyteller announces that Evil has won.

Dan The Founding has found the Royal Blood, and intends to win the game on the spot. Eric The Armored tells town that he is a good execution today, and is executed and dies. Dan immediately reveals himself as The Founding, but unbeknownst to Dan, Jack the Soldier is now the Demon, and the Storyteller announces that the game continues. Dan is executed the next day.

- The Founding’s ability is only active while they are alive, like any other ability. If The Founding is dead when Good would win, their ability does not trigger.
- The Founding cannot choose to end the game early to guess the Royal Blood. They may work with their Demon to get them executed, but this may backfire if there is a Soldier in play.
- Like The Attack, The Founding modifies setup to replace a Townsfolk with the Royal Blood Outsider. There will be one more Outsider than normal when The Founding is in play.
- If The Attack and The Founding are both in play, their setup abilities are redundant. There will be one more Outsider than normal, one of which must be the Royal Blood.

How to run:

To set up a game with The Founding, include the normal number of Outsiders, without the Royal Blood. Then, replace a Townsfolk with the Royal Blood.

When the game ends in a Good victory, if The Founding is alive, announce that the game is over, but do not announce a winner. Ask the Founding Titan to reveal themselves, and publicly choose who the Royal Blood is. If they guess correctly, announce that Evil wins. If they guess incorrectly, announce that Good wins.

Demons

The Beast

Each night*, choose a player: they become a Titan (they change back when they die).

The Beast Titan turns the players' bodies themselves into the instruments of their destruction.

"Ahem... AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA-"

Examples:

Kat The Beast chooses Jack the Recruit. Jack is told that he is now a Titan. He loses his Recruit ability. The next day, he nominates and votes, and the next night, the Storyteller decides that Jack attacks and kills Pat the Commander, and moves away. Jack learns that Pat has died and he has moved along with the rest of the town. The next night, the Captain kills Jack. Jack is told that he is now the Recruit, and at dawn the Storyteller announces that Jack is dead.

Sophia The Jaw and Adam the Scout are currently Titans. The Beast turns the Captain into a Titan, and The Beast and The Cart are the only 2 non-Titan players alive. The game is over and Evil wins. Sophia wins and Adam loses, since their alignments never changed.

- A player who is also a Titan keeps their original alignment, and is considered both a player and a Titan. Player Titans are treated like Travelers: they may nominate, vote, and fight, but are not in control of their Titan ability, and do not count towards the number of living players for win conditions. When a Player Titan dies, instead of disappearing, they return to their original character.
- All players will know that a player has become a Titan. Their token in the town square will be replaced with a Titan token, until they are dead.
- Player Titans can be killed by anything that could kill a normal Titan, including fighting.

How to run:

Each night, indicate for The Beast to choose a player. Mark that player with the "Become Titan" reminder token. Wake that player, and inform them of their new character.

While that player is a Titan, they continue to play as before, and may still nominate and vote as long as they live, but their identity as a Titan is public, they do not count towards the number of living players, and they have no control over their ability to kill and move each night. They keep their alignment, and if the game ends while they are a Titan, they win or lose with their team.

When the player is killed, they revert back to whichever character they were before becoming a Titan. Wake them, and inform them of their new (old) character.

The Armored

At the end of each night, a Titan enters. Once per game at night*, Titans cannot die tonight.

The Armored Titan summons a steady stream of Titans, and can make them indestructible for a night.

“It's over. You've lost. We've all suffered enough. You've suffered enough. It doesn't matter how much we struggle against it. Everyone dies. What's left for you... If you keep on living?!”

Examples:

Ben The Armored chooses to use his ability tonight. Cameron the Captain fought last night, so tonight they do not fight, expecting their ability to kill the neighboring Titan. The Titan does not die, kills Cameron, and moves away.

Amy the Recruit and Beth the Commander both choose to fight, so that Daniel the Scout can kill the Titan between them. Sophia The Armored uses her ability, so the Titan does not die when Daniel chooses it. The Titan kills Beth, does not die even though Beth was fighting, and moves away.

- The Armored is the only Demon that wakes before the Titans act at night. Like the Noble, The Armored does not cause a Titan to enter when they wake. The Titan will enter at the very end of the night, once everyone else has acted.
- The night The Armored uses their ability, all Titans cannot die for any reason. Abilities cannot kill them, and fighting cannot kill them. They will attack and move as they normally would.

How to run:

Each night, wake The Armored, and ask them whether they would like to use their ability tonight. If they indicate yes, mark them with the “Armored” reminder token, and tonight, Titans cannot die for any reason. Once they use their ability, do not wake them again.

Each night, once everyone else has acted, decide on a space for a Titan to enter, and mark it with the “Titan Enters” reminder token. At dawn, announce that a Titan has entered and announce its position in the Town Square.

The Colossal

Each night, you may have a Titan enter. If you chose not to have one enter last night, three Titans enter.

The Colossal Titan may skip a night to charge up a devastating attack that unleashes a flood of Titans.

“None of you have done anything wrong. And you’re not devils. It’s just that you all have to die. There’s nothing you can do now.”

Examples:

The first night, Edgar The Colossal chooses to have a Titan enter. The second night, Edgar chooses not to have one enter, but Ryan The Jaw causes a Titan to enter, so at dawn the Storyteller announces that a Titan has entered. The third night, Edgar is not woken, and three Titans enter, plus one more from The Jaw, and at dawn the Storyteller announces that four Titans have entered.

Kaitlyn the Colossal chooses not to have a Titan enter. The next night, George the Vanguard chooses to use his ability, causing no new Titans to be able to enter. No new Titans enter, and the following night, the Storyteller again asks Kaitlyn if she would like a Titan to enter.

- The Colossal “charges” when they choose not to have a Titan enter. It does not matter how many Titans actually enter that night – if they choose not to have a Titan enter, three Titans will enter the following night.
- If fewer than three Titans enter due to The Colossal, either because there is no legal space for them to enter, or because an effect is preventing Titans from entering, then the ability is still spent, and The Colossal will not be able to have three Titans enter for another two nights.

How to run:

Each night, wake The Colossal, and ask them to indicate whether they would like a Titan to enter. If they indicate yes, mark them with the “Titan Enters” reminder token, and choose a space in the Town Square for a Titan to enter. If they indicate no, mark them with the “Three Titans Enter” reminder token, and no Titans enter due to their ability tonight.

If the Colossal Titan was already marked with the “Three Titans Enter” reminder token, do not wake them. Remove the token, and choose a space in the Town Square for each of 3 titans to enter. Mark each space with the “Titan Enters” reminder token. As always, announce all Titan entry at dawn, but do not announce the source of each entry.

The Female

Each night, choose a player: a Titan enters next to them. You learn who Titans attack, and choose where they move afterwards.

The Female Titan has especially fine control over the Titans, and can direct them around at will.

“I do think we're worthless, and we're definitely evil. You certainly can't call us upright, but... Doesn't that just make us regular people?”

Examples:

There are three Titans in town. Amy The Female learns that the Titan between Josh and Ben attacked Josh, the Titan between Kay and Ryan attacked Kay, and the Titan between Nicky and Joe attacked Joe. The Storyteller indicates that the Titan between Josh and Ben can move, and Amy chooses for it to move between Ryan and Nicky. Then, the Storyteller indicates for Amy to choose a player, and she chooses Ben. At dawn, the Storyteller announces that Josh, Kay, and Joe have died in the night, two Titans have died, the Titan between Josh and Ben has moved between Ryan and Nicky, and a new Titan has entered between Ben and Emily.

Pam The Female chooses for a Titan to move between Sam and Chris. However, the Omni-Directional has swapped Chris with Tyler. The Titan moves between Sam and Tyler.

Nick The Female chooses for a Titan to move between Adam and Beth, but the Storyteller shakes her head. The Titan has only one legal move, because of the Wall Engineer. Nick keeps choosing positions until he finds the legal one, and the Storyteller nods her head. Nick uses this information to deduce who the Wall Engineer is, and chooses them. A Titan enters next to them, and kills them tomorrow night.

- The Female does not know if players have swapped seats. Titans will always move where the Female chooses, but may not be neighboring who The Female expects them to.
- If The Female chooses an illegal move for a Titan, they are told so and must choose again. If a Titan has no legal moves, the Storyteller does not indicate for The Female to move it at all.
- If The Female would cause a Titan to enter at an illegal position, no Titan enters due to their ability tonight.

How to run:

Each night, wake The Female, and indicate for them to choose a player. Mark that player with the “Titan Enters” reminder token. A Titan enters next to them. If there is no legal space on either side of them for a Titan to enter, nothing happens, and no Titan enters due to The Female’s ability tonight.

After Titans attack, wake The Female, and indicate which player each Titan has attacked. Then, indicate which Titans can move (which is usually all Titans that are still alive). For each Titan, The Female indicates a position for that Titan to move to. If that position is illegal because of another player’s ability, shake your head no and indicate for The Female to choose again.
